

Getting to Know You: Past, Present and Future

Listening to comments made at the Annual Congregational Meeting last Sunday heightened my sense of wanting to know more about you as individuals and as a congregation; past, present and future. You are a unique people of God coming from three different congregations with three distinct cultures: Christ the King Lutheran Church established 1967, St. Paul Lutheran Church, and a congregation from the Slovak-Zion Synod. I am wondering about the history of all of these congregations and its people. I am wondering about how they all came together to be one body of Christ that we know today as Christ the King Lutheran Church. I am wondering how it will continue to grow in unity as one body of Christ in all of its expressions.

I ask for your partnership in getting to know you. First, as individuals --- please continue to wear your name tags and/or say your name when you greet me and as we find time to chat, please tell me about yourself. I am interested in who you are as individuals. Second, as a congregation --- if you have information (written and verbal) about your congregation(s), please share those with me. Congregations can be complex systems and this one, while small and seemingly relatively young, is complex. Understanding more about your history will enable me to be of more assistance to you as you navigate your future as one congregation and it will help you move forward in your ministry.
